Judge James H. Brown. buried from Kanawha Presbyterian Church Charleston, at 10 a.m. Tuesday Oct. 30, 1900. Services conducted by Rev. R. H. Merrill, Dr. J. C. Barr, & Dr. J. C. Johnston.

Dr. Barr, who had known Judge Brown for a great many years said, in part =

"In mentioning some of his traits of character, as we knew him, we may say that but few men have the power to entertain & edify their friends in conversation which he had. His vigorous active mind was a storehouse of history, not only laid up from reading, but from his recollections of men & events with which he became thoroughly this life. Like a well arranged library, he had his knowledge laid up where he could always lay his hand upon it. I have never found any history of the old state of Va, whether civil or religious, so full & interesting as that which I have often heard from his own lips. This was the charm of his conversation; his power to draw such vivid illustrations from his knowledge of the past."

"Another remarkable trait of his character was his magnanimity toward his fellow men. He was a man of strong convictions, and he was independent in expressing them. He held to settled principle with a mighty grasp. But however warmly you opposed him or contested any principle with him it never made the slightest change in his feelings toward you personally."

He was at Marietta College, Ohio in early thirties & in 1839-40 at Augusta College, Ky & was graduated in fall of 1840.

Stokes Co. N. Carolina with her father Nathaniel Scales & his family when she the youngest of the children was about nine years old

In was about 1805 "He and his family cut a pioneer road through the then wilderness, by a bee line as nearly as possible, for south western Va. As the family "Schooner" wagon made its way slowly through the wilds no obstacles was formidable enough to turn it back, when a precipice was reached, the wheels were taken off, the wagon separated and dropped to the level below, while the horses and the family made a detour around and the journey was resumed

Maj. Seales ~~bought~~ settled on a farm on the Ohio River where part of Huntington now stands and called it "Maple Grove".

These family farms are not without interest to those connected with them not only on account of association but also on account of their historical reminiscences and long and complicated settlement in the high court of Chancery at Staunton of the rights and interests of the numerous claimants being parts of the large tract called the Savage Grant containing 28627 acres to Capt.

John Savage and sixty others by King George IV before the Rev. War for military services under the proclamation of Gov.
Dinwiddie of Va. Feb 19, 1754
to encourage prompt enlistments in the service of the crown
by military land bounties.
Gen Washington on behalf of himself and the other officers and soldiers entitled to the bounty, as having just embarked in the service presented a petition to the Gov. & Council in 1769 praying that the 200 000 acres of land thus offered in the proclamation might be allotted to them in one or more surveys. On the Monongahela & its waters, the New River, the Great Kanawha & the Great Tatlarey (now the Big Sandy) the grant for the lands was issued in 1772 & 3 & among them is the Savage Grant
