Room in Nasreddin Hoca's Bed

night when Nasreddin Hoca was sleeping, he took too much of the bed, crowding his wife so badly that she didn't have any space to lie. Awaking him, she said, "Hoca, move over a little bit

Hoca woke up fully, dressed himself, and left the house. He went through the village and then beyond its limits into a neighboring village. There he cupped his hands over his mouth and shouted back at his wife, "Oh, Wife! Should go any farther than this?"
