A close-up photograph of a piece of aged, light brown paper. The paper is covered with numerous small, dark brown circular holes, which appear to be made by a punch or a similar tool. These holes are scattered across the surface in various patterns, including horizontal rows, vertical columns, and irregular clusters. A vertical crease or fold is visible on the right side of the paper. The overall appearance is that of a perforated document or a piece of paper designed for easy removal of sections.
