Dear Mother.

Your letter of last week came to hand last evening, and like you I can say am glad to learn that you and all are well - I saw the death of Mary Washburn in the Herald and also the death of Willie James ^{wife} - it always seemed to me like a child-marriage, and it seems like a strange fatality that they should be separated so soon - The death of Mary no doubt will be very sad indeed ^{and} a hard blow - I enjoyed the ladies in "Memorial" very much - What in the world is the use of worrying and annoying yourself about what ^{Uncle} William intends doing ^{and} what he don't - I am sure he has been pretty prompt, or at least his agent, is, Mr Dewey - Keep at him until you get your taxes ^{and} interest paid - you ^{have}

new paper on business - tell done enough for the family and do at the present time, not to feel so terribly under obligations - if he withdraws his assistance, why your worrying ^{and} troubling won't hurry it along or keep it away - I know you feel sensitive ^{about} it - but don't keep continually worrying and thinking about it - The weather has been perfectly splendid during the week balmy ^{and} spring like - you have had quite a sledge of ice and snow - this morning it was charming until noon - presto change - blowing and snowing hard - although not very cold - Business was slow and is quiet until the weather gets more settled ^{and} travel commences - I have a nice fire in my room - the landlady and husband are sitting in my room - I have just finished a cup of Custard - (4. ³⁰ P.M.) and a large plate of pop corn is sitting on the table on which I am writing - had some more hot doughnuts this morning - they are pretty good, but not like yours - I enjoy my room very much - I have expected to write father, but have not yet, you must read him my letters

If not called for in ten days, return to
