Dear Ray,

Finally I take my trusted pen in hand to compose an epistle worthy of your perusal. I just finished the 12th and final page of my first paper for law school. It's only supposed to be 10 pages. I think I have some editing to do. Oh well, I guess I can do that tomorrow.

Well, no national championship for Duke football this year. Last night we lost to Virginia 42-17. I'm glad it was an away game, or else I might have been there for the debacle.

Friday night I stayed at the law library until 11:30 working on my paper. I got home around 11:45 and at 12:15, the phone rang. It was my dad. He was calling from the Sheraton here in Durham. It seems they decided to come out here because a guy in S. Carolina was interested in buying the plane. They had mentioned that they might come earlier in the week, but never called me back. So I kind of forgot about it. Anyway, here they were. So ~~so~~ yesterday they flew to S.C. and back and last night we went out for dinner. The rest of the day I worked on my paper.

I've come to a conclusion: Law school without writing assignments isn't too bad. It's manageable, or at least you can get the work done. However, once you have a ten page paper due a week after it's assigned, law school is all that "they" say it is. But I've got a rough draft, albeit a bit wordy, and I have a few weeks respite (???) from writing.

I'm going to be in Waco @ Homecoming and in Lubbock @ Thanksgiving. I'll probably see at one of these times. I hope the working world is going well for you.
See you soon, Chuck.

P.S. Say hi to Rick for me the next time you hear from him. I really would like to hear from him or at least know his new address + phone #.
